

Place-making through culture:

The role of religiosity as a cultural phenomenon in the construction of place in Caracas' barrios

Gabriela QUINTANA VIGIOLA
PhD
2017

Place-making through culture:

The role of religiosity as a cultural phenomenon in the construction of place in Caracas' barrios

Gabriela QUINTANA VIGIOLA

PhD

2017

CERTIFICATE OF ORIGINAL AUTHORSHIP

I certify that the work in this thesis has not previously been submitted for a degree nor has it been submitted as part of requirements for a degree except as part of the collaborative doctoral degree and/or fully acknowledged within the text.

I also certify that the thesis has been written by me. Any help that I have received in my research work and the preparation of the thesis itself has been acknowledged. In addition, I certify that all information sources and literature used are indicated in the thesis.

Signature of Student:

Date:

This research is supported by an Australian Government Research Training Program Scholarship.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I have been able to develop this research and present this place-making story thanks to the support of several people. I would like to acknowledge and express my gratitude to all who contributed to this marvelous journey:

- The research participants, whose experiences and voices enabled me to understand the concept of place and what place-making means.
- Father Jesús León, who introduced me to all the other participants and supported me throughout the development of the research.
- José Antonio, thank you very much for being my guide and bodyguard, and for providing such rich information about La Dolorita and Holy Week processions
- Heather MacDonald, whose deep insights and critical perspective enriched this thesis beyond my imagination. Thank you for believing in and supporting me when I asked to transfer my PhD to Australia; this would not have happened here without you.
- Pernille Christensen, thank you so much for your detailed feedback, which helped me improve my writing skills and this document.
- The Faculty of Design, Architecture and Building, and the University of Technology Sydney staff, who supported me during the process of transferring my studies from Venezuela, and kept encouraging me throughout and until completion.
- Frank Marcano Requena, my main supervisor in Venezuela, who encouraged me to engage in my doctorate studies, and guided me in the tuning of the research topic and the initial years of the study.
- Enrique González Ordosgoitti, my secondary supervisor in Venezuela, thank you for teaching me about Venezuelan culture and religiosity, and for helping me in the process of linking urban studies and Catholicism.
- Esther Wiesenfeld, whose teachings about qualitative methodology, environmental and community psychology, and sense of place and meaning from a psychosocial perspective opened my architectural-designer eyes to the importance of understanding people's psychosocial processes. I would also like to thank Esther for her love and support throughout the years.

- The Instituto de Urbanismo [Institute of Urbanism], and the Universidad Central de Venezuela [Central University of Venezuela] staff, who supported me during the initial years of my PhD studies, as well as through the process of transferring my studies to UTS.
- Hazel Baker, who provided copyediting services according to the IPED guidelines for editing research theses.
- My family and friends, who have supported and borne with me and my thesis for several years, asking me every time we talked 'when are you submitting'... well, I finally did it!

Finally, and most importantly, I dedicate this to my grandmothers, who always believed in and supported me, and with whom I would have loved to share this achievement.

Without really planning, or even actually thinking about it, I decided to start my doctorate studies in Venezuela in 2007. That year I focused only on deciding what I wanted to investigate. I knew two things for certain: (1) I did not want to research anything that could relate in any way to criminality or criminal violence (which in the end I realised was unavoidable), and (2) I wanted to engage in people-focused research. From its start, this study was reflective of an emergent design. Looking into the things I was passionate about at the time (and which I am still passionate about), I started asking myself a simple question: why do people practise yoga in urban spaces that are not meant for this discipline? This first question led to a lot of thinking about urban spaces and spirituality in general, which subsequently resulted in me deciding that I wanted to research spiritual manifestations in urban spaces.

As can be seen from the title of this thesis, I eventually studied something rather different. However, from that first macro theme, the process of tuning the research led to a narrower focus: understanding different Catholic processions in the urban space of Venezuelan barrios in general. From that point, and as part of my research process, I attended different religiosity and theology courses because it was paramount to get a better understanding of this disciplinary field, even though I was myself a Catholic, and because my Venezuelan supervisor advised me to.

In one of those courses, I met a priest who later became a key participant in my research. He was also studying a PhD that involved religiosity and the built environment, with a strong focus on religiosity. Based on that affinity, the fact that he was living and working at that time in one of Caracas' largest barrios, and the importance to me of having a community member or someone highly regarded in the community who could make it safe for me to enter the barrio, I decided to select that barrio as one of the places to study.

At that stage, I was still thinking about extending the research into other Caracas barrios. However, as I became more involved in the research and got to know the complexities of the context, I refined the scope to the research questions, objectives and the three areas of study reflected in this final result. In 2008 I started the data collection in the barrios selected, but still wanted to explore all the Catholic processions that took place in them. However, this pilot showed I needed to focus only on Holy Week, which led me to engage in more data collection over the three years from 2009 to 2011. Once the data collection was complete and the analysis was about to start, I migrated to Australia in 2012.

This move changed both my life in general and my PhD studies. I put my PhD temporarily on hold, aiming to get back to it once I had settled, and still intending to finish it remotely through my Venezuelan university. However, due to Venezuela's complex political and economic environment at the time, which deeply affected universities, I decided to transfer my topic to UTS in 2013/2014.

As if migrating was not challenging enough, transferring my PhD was even more so. This process involved my translating everything I had already written from Spanish to English, and explaining to my new supervisors the general Venezuelan context, barrios, our culture, our religiosity and our complexities.

Looking back and looking at this thesis, transferring my PhD was the best decision I could have taken. The process of overcoming the challenges mentioned above enriched the thesis, the analysis, and the understanding of the context, barrios and place-making. Through all the explaining I had to engage in, I became aware of matters I previously took for granted or had not realised existed. Through this whole process, I grew as a researcher and as a person.

TABLE OF CONTENT

Certificate of Original Authorship	i
Acknowledgements.....	iii
Preface	v
Table of content.....	vii
List of figures	xi
List of tables	xv
Abstract	xvii
1 Introduction	1
1.1. Study context.....	2
1.2. Place-making	3
1.3. Research questions and objectives.....	7
1.4. Thesis structure	8
2 Methodological approach	12
2.1 Paradigmatic and methodological approach.....	13
2.2 Research design.....	17
2.3 Participants.....	21
2.3.1 Community participants.....	21
2.3.2 Research team.....	25
2.4 Data collection.....	25

2.4.1	Data collection techniques	26
2.4.2	Data collection process	33
2.5	Data analysis	41
2.6	Presenting the stories	43
2.7	Conclusion	44
3	Barrio origin: El Nazareno, La Dolorita & Julián Blanco	45
3.1	Caracas' growth and The origin of barrios.....	46
3.1.1	Barrios' general context	47
3.1.2	Caracas' barrios growth story	50
3.2	Case study: El Nazareno, Julián Blanco and La Dolorita.....	60
3.3	Public and private Realm: the Foundation stories of El Nazareno, Julián Blanco and La Dolorita.....	64
3.3.1	Public realm foundation stories	65
3.3.2	Private realm: from rancho to house	71
3.4	Conclusion: founding the place-making stories.....	73
4	Barrio development and current urban structure	75
4.1	Private realm: from rancho to urban space.....	76
4.1.1	From house to urban space: densification process	77
4.1.2	The barrio house as a relational space	80
4.2	Public Realm: the development stories of El Nazareno, Julián Blanco and La Dolorita.....	82
4.2.1	Natural environment	82

4.2.2	Infrastructure: water supply and sewage	85
4.2.3	Infrastructure: road network	88
4.2.4	Public spaces	97
4.2.5	Public services and community facilities.....	105
4.3	Public Realm: construction of religious spaces	109
4.3.1	Community and religious space	110
4.3.2	Institutional involvement.....	112
4.4	Conclusion: comprehending barrios' urban space	117
5	Activities in the barrio urban space	121
5.1	Everyday activities	121
5.2	Criminal activities.....	123
5.2.1	Criminal activities in the barrios urban space	124
5.2.2	Criminal activities' impact on residents' everyday lives.....	125
5.3	Religious activities.....	130
5.3.1	Holy Week processions overview	131
5.3.2	Procession decision-making processes.....	137
5.3.3	Procession path	143
5.4	Conclusion: Re-shaping the urban space	154
6	Meaning of barrios' urban space.....	157
6.1	Meaning of community	160
6.1.1	Relationship of thugs and other community members	163

6.1.2	Other effects of criminal violence on the community	167
6.2	Meaning of religiosity and processions	170
6.2.1	Participants and their religiosity	171
6.2.2	Thugs and religiosity	174
6.3	Conclusion: Meaning of place.....	177
7	Conclusion: Place-making	181
7.1	Findings and insights from these stories:	183
7.1.1	Institutions and displacement stories shaping place.....	186
7.1.2	Public-private flexible relationship (physical and psychological)	189
7.1.3	Relational urban spaces	192
7.1.4	Flexible meaning of the urban space	193
7.2	Final reflection and next steps.....	195
	References	199
	Appendix A: General context	213
	Appendix B: In-depth interview outline.....	223
	Appendix C: Research participants.....	225

LIST OF FIGURES

Figure 2.1: Methodological decisions' synthesis	13
Figure 2.2: Me before one procession in which I participated as one of 'the people'. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.	28
Figure 3.1: Barrio urban fabric – view of Julián Blanco. Source: G.Quintana Vigiola	48
Figure 3.2: Indicative map of Caracas in 1873. Source: Irma De-Sola (1969).....	51
Figure 3.3: Historical growth of Caracas 1954. Source: Irma De-Sola (1969)	51
Figure 3.4: Caracas land use map - 1960. Source: Irma De-Sola (1969).....	54
Figure 3.5: Location of Petare and La Dolorita in Caracas. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola based on Google Maps satellite image.	60
Figure 3.6: Selected areas of study: El Nazareno, Julián Blanco and La Dolorita. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola based on base map from the Institute of Urbanism – UCV database.....	62
Figure 3.7: Urban morphology in El Nazareno, Julián Blanco and La Dolorita. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola based on base map from the Institute of Urbanism – UCV database.....	64
Figure 3.8: North Petare and context. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola based on Google Maps satellite image.....	68
Figure 3.9: Rancho in early development of Barrio Bolívar in Julián Blanco	72
Figure 4.1: El Nazareno view from a participant's house. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	78

Figure 4.2: Different development stages in Julián Blanco. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	79
Figure 4.3: Landslide in Julián Blanco. Source: Alcaldía del Municipio Sucre (Council of Sucre Municipality).....	84
Figure 4.4: Pedestrian and vehicular traffic in La Dolorita. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	91
Figure 4.5: Semi-public staircase in La Dolorita. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	94
Figure 4.6: Illustration of semi-public space configuration (same staircase as Figure 4.5). Source: G. Quintana Vigiola based on base map from the Institute of Urbanism – UCV database.	96
Figure 4.7: La Dolorita multi-sport field. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	99
Figure 4.8: La Dolorita nodal spaces and facilities. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola..	100
Figure 4.9: Node 2 zoom. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	100
Figure 4.10: Julián Blanco's Arch. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	102
Figure 4.11: The Obelisk in El Nazareno. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	102
Figure 4.12: Julián Blanco Roundabout. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	103
Figure 4.13: Basketball court in Julián Blanco. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	104
Figure 4.14: El Nazareno community centre in Julián Blanco. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	108
Figure 4.15: The Cross of El Morro in El Nazareno. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	111
Figure 5.1: Julián Blanco's Nazarene with community leaders. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	134
Figure 5.2: Way of the Cross - Station 1. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	136
Figure 5.3: Way of the Cross - Station 1. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	136

Figure 5.4: Way of the Cross. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	137
Figure 5.5: Different generations at the Nazarene procession in La Dolorita. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	142
Figure 5.6: Procession stop at street opening in La Dolorita. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	143
Figure 5.7: Altar at house in Julián Blanco. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	145
Figure 5.8: Obstacles on Palm Sunday procession path in La Dolorita Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	147
Figure 5.9: Participants in the Way of the Cross procession on Good Friday in El Nazareno. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola.....	149
Figure 7.1: Power relationships in/over the urban space of barrios.....	184
Figure 7.2: Community in El Parquecito on Good Friday. Source: G. Quintana Vigiola	194

LIST OF TABLES

Table 2.1: Summary of data collection stages around each procession.....	34
Table 2.2: Research team allocation matrix.....	38
Table 3.1: Caracas and its barrios in numbers. Source: Elaborated based on Silva, Caradonna & Galavis (2016)	59
Table 5.1: Holy Week structure	132
Table C.1: Main research participants	226

In this thesis I present a story about place-making through culture, specifically about the construction of place in Caracas' barrios through Catholic processions. From a trans-disciplinary perspective, I approach the themes of urban space, meaning as a psychosocial construct, and religiosity as culture. This thesis contributes to the understanding of the underlying complexities of turning spaces into places through studying the built form, the activities in and uses of the urban space, and the meanings associated with it.

The main research question that guides this study is: What is the role of culture (using Catholicism as a lens) in the construction of place in Caracas' barrios? In addition, three component questions that align to the three fundamental place-making elements guide the three main stories that build this thesis:

1. How do barrio residents conceive and construct the physicality of the private, public and religious spaces?
2. How do residents use the physical spaces of the barrios to express their religious culture?
3. What psychosocial meanings do residents associate with the spaces through which the Catholic processions move?

To answer these questions, I chose a qualitative approach and a case study design. I interacted with and interviewed organisers and key participants, engaged in participant observation around Holy Week processions, and collected audio-visual data. Using qualitative thematic analysis, I explore from the participants' perspectives their understanding of the construction of their place through culture.

The research shows that cultural manifestations in the urban space are not only a way for people to express their culture. They are also a way for people to reclaim their spaces, build relational places, redefine the flexible private-public boundary, and reshape meaning. This study also revealed the different power relationships in barrios, and how institutions impact on the construction of place in barrios. Through this place-making story, I demonstrate the importance to understand, consider and enable culture.