

A Study of Suicide Grief:

Meaning Making and the Griever's Relational World

Diana C. C. Sands

Doctor of Philosophy

2008

CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORSHIP/ORIGINALITY

I certify that the work in this thesis has not previously been submitted for a degree nor has it been submitted as part of requirements for a degree except as fully acknowledged within the text.

I also certify that the thesis has been written by me. Any help that I have received in my research work and the preparation of the thesis itself has been acknowledged. In addition, I certify that all information sources and literature used are indicated in the thesis.

Signature of Student

Diana C. C. Sands

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is a heart-lifting but humbling experience to reflect on how many people there are to thank for supporting me in writing this thesis. Over the five years this study has taken to write there have been times when I felt the loneliness of the long distance runner and yet throughout family, friends and colleagues have been there for me with encouragement that has helped me believe in my ability to achieve this goal. I envisage family, friends and colleagues as a special cheer squad, like lights along a long runway helping me to arrive safely at this place of completion. Each person has given me something of unique value that has helped me along the way. I wish to thank my academic supervisor Dr. Mark Tennant, Dean, University Graduate School, UTS, who has guided me with experience and wisdom through many thesis difficulties and made me want to strive harder in my academic scholarship. His interest, unwavering patience and perceptive comments have been a guiding light. I want to acknowledge the Salvation Army Chatswood Corps for awarding me a Study Grant, the University of Technology Sydney for a Vice-Chancellor's Postgraduate Research Students Conference Fund Grant and the Australian Commonwealth Government for a Research Scholarship. I would like to acknowledge and thank the bereavement group co-facilitator Alexandra, who offered her lively and questioning interest to this research, reading transcripts, analysis notes and spending countless hours patiently listening to me talking about it. My acknowledgement and thanks to Joan Rosenthal for her excellent editorial skills and patience with repeated referencing errors. I would also like to acknowledge the considered and constructive comments made by examiners including the term 'tripartite'.

To my husband Richard, with gratitude for our journey together over so many wonderful years, for his unwavering support and belief in the work I do, for his technical advice with my Apple computer and for keeping me fed so that I could stay at my computer. To my family and friends who put up with me while I was absorbed, absent and distracted, I thank you for your good wishes, phone calls, emails and patience. I specially wish to thank Julian for excellent conversations about everything related to death, dying and the universe, Rebecca for valued friendship and support, Rita for special words from the other side, and Margaret for inspiring me to begin. For good advice I must thank my father-in-law, Dr. John Sands, who many years ago impressed upon me the importance of learning to sit and listen to patients. He also opined (with reference to terminal care), that if one had the capacity to record and analyse then one should set about correcting this “barren area of our medical literature”. Most importantly I wish to acknowledge and thank all those people bereaved by suicide who over my long career have so intimately shared their stories, trust and loved ones with me and taught me about grief and the infinite power of love through forging places of knowing deep in my heart and soul. I particularly want to thank the generous and resilient people who participated in this study, who in the midst of their own grieving were concerned to give something that might benefit others experiencing this heart-rending loss. Finally, a prayer for my grandmother and grandfather, my mother and our family: I hope this thesis, like alchemy, brings a deep sense of peace in making out of tragedy something of value and worth for others.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORSHIP/ORIGINALITY	i
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	ii
LIST OF FIGURES AND TABLES	x
ABSTRACT	xi
CHAPTER ONE: INTRODUCTION	1
1.1 Introduction to study	1
1.2 Suicide: An Australian issue	3
1.3 Relevance of the study	6
1.4 Theoretical context and explanation of the study aim	7
1.5 Derivation and motivation for the study	13
CHAPTER 2: NEW THEORIES OF GRIEF	16
2.1 Introduction	16
2.2 Meaning making	18
2.3 Meaning making and narrative	22
2.4 Relationship with deceased - continuing bonds	24
2.5 Relationship with self, recovery and growth through grief	29
2.6 Relationships with others	33
2.7 Implications for practice	35
CHAPTER 3: SUICIDE BEREAVEMENT: A SPECIAL CASE OF GRIEF	37
3.1 Introduction	37
3.2 Suicide: Historical perspectives	37
3.3 Suicide grief	39
3.4 Suicide grief: Complications in grief and suicidal ideation	40
3.5 Suicide grief: Traumatic grief	42
3.6 Suicide grief: Social issues and impact on family system	43
3.7 Suicide grief: Thematic differences	45
3.8 Suicide grief: Intentionality	47
3.9 Suicide grief: A violent self-inflicted death	48
CHAPTER 4: NEW THEORIES OF GRIEF AND SUICIDE GRIEF	53
4.1 Introduction	53
4.2 Meaning making in suicide grief: Complications and suicidal ideation	53
4.3 Relationship with the deceased: Suicide grief	59

4.4	Relationship with self: Suicide grief	64
4.5	Relationship with others: Suicide grief	70
CHAPTER 5: METHODOLOGY		75
5.1	Theoretical and methodological assumptions	75
5.2	Hermeneutic methodology	76
5.3	Relevance of methodology	77
5.4	Relevance of data	78
5.5	Conceptualisation of meaning as a method of analysis	81
5.6	Negative meanings and no meaning	82
5.7	Conceptualisation of relationship as a method of analysis	82
5.8	Method	84
5.8.1	Ethics approval	84
5.8.2	Ethical considerations – accessing group data	84
5.8.3	Confidentiality and data	86
5.8.4	Participant demographic information	86
5.8.5	Participant group exclusion criteria – intake assessment	89
5.8.6	Participant group inclusion criteria	89
5.8.7	Criteria for participant research inclusion	90
5.8.8	Researcher knowledge framework	91
5.8.9	Researcher/facilitator and co-facilitator group participation	91
5.8.10	Context of data – closed group program	92
5.8.11	Location of group programs	93
5.8.12	Participant time commitment	93
5.8.13	Participant benefit	93
5.8.14	Techniques of verbal data collection	94
5.8.15	Techniques for written data collection	94
5.8.16	Types of data	95
5.8.17	Data interpretation	97
5.8.18	Data analysis – audit trail	97
5.8.19	Study limitation – the sample	103
5.8.20	Study limitation – resources	104
5.8.21	Study limitation – data validity	105
5.8.22	Study limitation – researcher reflective validity	106

CHAPTER 6: UNDERSTANDING RELATIONSHIP:

	TRYING ON THE SHOES	108
6.1	Trying on the shoes: The meaning of intentionality	108
6.2	Trying on the shoes: Relationship themes	109
6.3	Trying on the shoes: Relationship with the deceased	111
6.3.1	It's in every pore of my skin	111
6.3.2	Soul mate	111
6.3.3	When she was dying	114
6.3.4	Nothing to celebrate her life to explain her death	115
6.4	Trying on the shoes: Mental health of the deceased	116
6.4.1	I can't find a connection	117
6.5	Trying on shoes: Relationship with self	119
6.5.1	Mantle of guilt	119
6.5.2	It wipes me out	120
6.5.3	Ground Zero	122
6.5.4	I live in hell every day – I failed him	123
6.5.5	Me not recognising the degree of pain	124
6.5.6	I could have helped her	124
6.5.7	Constantly on the alert	125
6.5.8	Broken into pieces	125
6.5.9	Unsure, insecure, timid	126
6.6	Trying on the shoes: Relationship within grief group	126
6.6.1	Permission to be more me	126
6.6.2	She had been leaving in little pieces	127
6.7	Trying on the shoes: Relationship with others	129
6.7.1	No-go zone at home	130
6.7.2	The most alone person in a relationship	130
6.8	Summary	131

CHAPTER 7: RECONSTRUCTING RELATIONSHIP:

	WALKING IN THE SHOES	134
7.1	Walking in the shoes: Reconstructing the death story	134
7.2	Walking in the shoes: Suicidality, differentiation, negotiating the blind spot	136

7.3	Walking in the shoes: Reconstruction and relational themes	137
7.4	Walking in the shoes: Relationship with the deceased	137
7.4.1	I think about it every day	138
7.4.2	I often go there in my mind	141
7.4.3	I just feel so much	143
7.4.4	I had to know	144
7.5	Walking in the shoes: Relationship with self	146
7.5.1	Why did his life have to work out that way?	146
7.5.2	The violence of her jumping haunts me	148
7.5.3	I do start going down that track	149
7.6	Walking in the shoes: Relationship with others outside and within grief group, the blind spot	150
7.6.1	I don't see the point of so much of it	150
7.6.2	There doesn't seem to be any sense	151
7.6.3	I can't always rationalise	151
7.6.4	You have to work forward with it without denying it	152
7.6.5	Some sort of sentence and afterwards we'll be free to leave	153
7.7	Walking in the shoes: Relationship within grief group – active storying	153
7.7.1	What I couldn't believe was that I just I'd spoken to her	154
7.7.2	I didn't want to see her like that	155
7.7.3	Maybe we could have gone down another road	156
7.7.4	Nothing I do will bring her back	157
7.7.5	I guess you have to have pain for something to grow	158
7.8	Summary	159
CHAPTER 8: REPOSITIONING RELATIONSHIP:
	TAKING OFF THE SHOES	162
8.1	Taking off the shoes: Repositioning	162
8.2	Taking off the shoes: Relationship themes	164
8.3	Taking off the shoes: Relationship with the deceased	164
8.3.1	It's almost like I am trying to draw her essence back into my life	165
8.3.2	The painful memories are washed through with many more pleasant memories	166
8.3.3	It's the best of him	168

8.3.4	Butterfly kiss	169
8.3.5	He visually visited me	169
8.4	Taking off the shoes: Relationship with self	170
8.4.1	A better appreciation of life	171
8.4.2	I never thought I could forgive myself	171
8.4.3	It's like a great weight has been lifted	172
8.4.4	Less hard on myself	172
8.4.5	I am open to new relationships	173
8.4.6	I am coping better with life	173
8.4.7	Safer – I'm not scared anymore	174
8.5	Taking off the shoes: Relationship with others	174
8.5.1	I have actually put her back in the family... part of them again	175
8.5.2	That's not the place that I want her in our lives	176
8.5.3	Getting past the way he died	177
8.6	Taking off the shoes: Relationship with group	178
8.6.1	The story of us: You can see he was a beautiful little boy	179
8.7	The process of repositioning within the grief group	181
8.7.1	I don't want it to be the overriding thing	182
8.8	Summary	184
CHAPTER 9: DISCUSSION		188
9.1	Introduction	188
9.2	Summary of findings	188
9.3	Summary: The tripartite model of suicide grief	199
9.4	Summary: Labyrinth model of suicide grief	201
9.5	Discussion research findings and contribution to grief literature and research	205
9.6	Practice implications: Stepping backwards in order to step forward	209
9.6.1	Practice implications: Meaning making	210
9.6.2	Practice implications: Griever's relational world – complications in grief and suicidality	213
9.6.3	Practice implications: Resourcing for enriched narrative construction	215
9.6.4	Practice implications: Griever's relational world – repairing trust	216
9.6.5	Practice implications: Groups – shared meaning making and rituals	217

9.6.6	Practice implications: Education that assists transformative learning	217
9.7	Limitations of thesis	218
9.8	Recommendations for further research	221
	Appendix A	225
	Approval Letter	225
	Appendix B	226
	Consent Form	226
	Appendix C	228
	Decline to Participate Form	228
	Appendix D	229
	Bereaved by suicide consent to record form	229
	Appendix E	230
	Permission to use analysis data and direct quotes	230
	BIBLIOGRAPHY	232

LIST OF FIGURES AND TABLES

Figure 1: Griever's relationship to deceased	88
Figure 2: Gender of deceased	88
Figure 3: The tripartite model of suicide grief	198
Figure 4: Labyrinth model of suicide grief	201
Figure 5: Body of trust intervention	212
Table 1: Summary of relevant grief literature	204

ABSTRACT

This study aims to increase understanding of the critical themes and features of suicide grief through an analysis of data drawn from the lived experience of those bereaved by suicide. The theoretical context for this study is developments in new theories of grief. Specifically, the study focused on suicide grief in the context of meaning making and the influence of suicide on the griever's relational world. The study analysed data through the lenses of three relationship areas, the griever's relationship with self, the griever's ongoing relationship with the deceased, and the griever's relationships with significant others outside and within a grief group. Using an interpretive, hermeneutic methodology to analyse participant conversations, three central organising themes were identified. The proposed tripartite working model of suicide grief to emerge outlines a process of adaptation, from engaging with meaning making issues regarding the intentional nature of suicide, to reconstruction of the death story, to repositioning the suicide and pain of the deceased's life. The metaphors of "trying on the shoes", "walking in the shoes" and "taking off the shoes" are used to indicate the grief process in relation to each identified theme. The thesis argues that suicide grief themes provide a meaning making framework that assists integrative grief processes. Not all those bereaved by suicide will engage with these themes, and progression through themes is not a linear process. The study findings provide insight into meaning making and relational difficulties that increase vulnerability to complications in grief, suicidality and maladaptive relationship with the deceased. Study findings also reveal that shifts from maladaptive to adaptive relationship with the deceased are possible even when no rational meanings can be made. It is suggested that these issues are so prevalent in suicide grief as to be a normal part of active meaning making efforts to integrate grief. The working model may assist in identifying ongoing education, practice and research issues. Significantly, the predominance of relating with the deceased through reconstruction of the death story, and the relationship between this and increased suicidal ideation to emerge in this study requires further research to determine how and when these activities shift from effective meaning making strategies to become active suicidality.