Pleasure and Dread: The Paradox of Travel

by

Jo Ankor

Bachelor of Cultural Tourism (Hons)

This thesis is submitted to the Graduate School of the University of Technology, Sydney in fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

December 2009
TABLE OF CONTENTS

CERTIFICATION ........................................................................................................... v
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS .............................................................................................. vi
DEDICATION ................................................................................................................ vii
ABSTRACT .................................................................................................................. viii

INTRODUCTION ......................................................................................................... 1

APPROACH .................................................................................................................. 3

THESIS OUTLINE ...................................................................................................... 7

NARRATIVE 1: BEGINNERS’ CHOICE ........................................................................ 13

1 TOURISM AND TRAVEL: PARADOXES IN THEORY ........................................... 21

   SUMMARY ................................................................................................................. 21

   1.1 THE STUDY OF TOURISM ............................................................................... 22

   1.2 QUALITATIVE ENQUIRY .............................................................................. 25

   1.2.1 COMPLEXITY AND QUALITATIVE ENQUIRY ........................................... 26

   1.3 THE SEARCH FOR MEANING ........................................................................ 30

   1.4 HOW TO VIEW THE EXPERIENCE? ............................................................. 31

WAYS OF SEEING: THE RESEARCHER’S GAZE ...................................................... 32

   1.5 DEBATES ON DEFINITIONS ........................................................................ 36

   1.5.1 DEFINING TRAVEL ................................................................................. 36

   1.5.2 DEFINING EXPERIENCE ......................................................................... 37

   1.5.3 THE NOMAD TRAVELLER ....................................................................... 38

   1.5.4 THE NEO-NOMAD TRAVELLER .............................................................. 38

   1.6 THEORISTS IMPORTANT TO THIS THESIS .............................................. 39

   1.7 REVIEWING TOURISM THEORY DEVELOPMENT .................................... 41

   1.8 APPROACH CHosen FOR THIS THESIS .................................................... 44

NARRATIVE 2: EXPLAINING IT AWAY ..................................................................... 46

2 CHOOSING THE UNKNOWN: PARADOXICAL NOMADS .................................... 53

   SUMMARY ................................................................................................................. 53

   2.1 DESTINATION UNKNOWN ............................................................................ 54

   2.2 ARTICULATING CHOICE – CULTURE AND LIMINALITY ................................ 55

   2.3 SITUATING CHOICE ....................................................................................... 57
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2.4 Limits in Language and Discourse</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.5 Travel – Home, Discovery and Privilege</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telling Ways</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.6 Kinds of Unknown - Wilderness, Adventure, Backpacker</td>
<td>67</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.6.1 Unknown – Free of Restriction</td>
<td>68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.6.2 Unknown as Pilgrimage to New Self</td>
<td>68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.6.3 Narrativisation of a New Self</td>
<td>69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.7 Nomadic Travellers</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.8 Nomadic Experience</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Narrative 3: The Sailing Body – There’s No Middle Ground at Sea! 76

3 Encountering Difference: The Offer in the Moment 89

3.1 The Moment 90

3.2 Creativity - Moment, Space and Presence 93

3.2.1 Creative Process 93

3.2.2 Creative Response 95

3.2.3 Situating Creativity 97

3.3 Space in the Moment 98

3.4 The Other in the Moment 100

3.5 The Embodied Relationship 102

Losing the Horizon: The Light of Night 103

3.6 The Reflective Subject – Narrativisation as Creative Subjectivity? 108

Narrative 4: The Exotic Liminal–Those Others, Being Other, Becoming Other 111

4 Other and Event: Philosophy of Possibilities 121

4.1 Universal Truths 122

4.2 Universality’s Limitations 124

4.3 Self and Other 126

Regarding Reflection: La Réflexion Regardée 126

4.4 Welcoming the Other 130

4.5 Levinas’ Philosophy of the Encounter 132

4.6 Responsibility – The Face of the Other 134

4.7 Generosity and Openness 136
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>4.8</td>
<td>THE PROCESS OF SUBJECTIVITY</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4.9</td>
<td>BADIOU’S PHILOSOPHY OF THE MULTIPLE</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4.10</td>
<td>POTENTIAL AND THE EVENT</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4.11</td>
<td>DYNAMIC SINGULARITY</td>
<td>141</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Narrative 5: Casual Wonder .................................................. 143

5 Travel for Change: Subjectivity and Wonder .................................. 155

- Summary ........................................................................ 155
- 5.1 Alterity and Multiplicities – Being in the World ......................... 156
- 5.2 Thinking the Unknown .................................................. 157
- 5.3 Critical Approaches to the Subject ..................................... 159
- 5.4 Disciplinary Critiques of the Subject ................................... 160
- 5.5 Limitations in Theory .................................................... 161
- 5.6 Requiring a New Approach .............................................. 162

Talking of Great Matters ..................................................... 163

- 5.7 Approaching the Subject .................................................. 165
- 5.8 A New Subject Position ................................................... 167

6 Conclusion: Viewing the Journey ........................................... 170

- Points of Departure ......................................................... 170
- Following Through .......................................................... 171
- An Arrival ........................................................................ 176

Narrative 6: Epilogue - Return to Known ....................................... 178

Bibliography ........................................................................ 181
CERTIFICATION

I certify that the work in this thesis has not previously been submitted for a degree.

I also certify that the thesis has been written by me. Any help that I have received in my research work and the preparation of the thesis itself has been acknowledged. In addition, I certify that all information sources and literature used are indicated in the thesis.

Date

Signature of Student

______________________________

Jo Ankor

16 December 2009
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to acknowledge that the work presented in this thesis was made possible by the contributions of many people.

At University of Technology Sydney: my supervisor, Dr Stephen Wearing, for constant, positive, effective and invaluable guidance and support; the warm and willing help from all staff for a scholar who lived thousands of kilometres away; the financial support of an Australian Postgraduate Award scholarship.

And always there: my daughters Liz and Ali; John; Norman and Ian; and many wonderful friends.
DEDICATION

To all the partners of Doctoral candidates who survived incremental loss and sudden reappearance – may they be bountifully rewarded for tenacity, endurance and always seeing the long view.
ABSTRACT

Both pleasure and dread lie in wait for the traveller. The willingness to embrace whichever of these may arise shapes the experience of travel. This thesis offers a multi-voiced exploration of this paradoxical relationship and seeks to develop a philosophical understanding of why we travel. Its intention is to expand the boundaries of tourism research methodologies and to suggest new ways of approaching the study of tourism.

This thesis begins in an observation of a personal experience of travelling by yacht, which brought contact with a group of people who had chosen to travel not because of what was known to be there, but precisely the opposite. This ‘unknown’ as destination was chosen because it was not known what may be found or what might happen. These travellers had set out, willingly accepting whatever may occur, seeking to meet face-to-face with the people and places that may arise – an acceptance of the paradoxical presence of both pleasure and dread. The focus of tourism research, on attractions, sights and services for example, does not appear to include travel which has no framework or specified purpose and which is specifically open to the surprise of the unexpected and the potential of the unpredictable.

Drawing on cultural studies, creativity studies and philosophy, an exploration is made of the unexpected and unpredictable moments of travel. Emmanuel Levinas’ (1969) philosophical analysis of the face-to-face encounter with the unknown ‘other’ offers an understanding of this encounter as where we can develop new meanings of our human position as subjects through a non-reductive relationship with difference. This leads to a consideration of the embodied and emplaced situation of the encounter in the experience of travel and a consideration that this encounter is critical to the development of new understanding of our relationship to the world and our own subjectivity.

Through the juxtaposition of narrative, academic and critical-creative writing, the contested nature of the relationship with difference is opened up in a manner usually restricted by tourism studies’ reliance on limited, dominant, research approaches. This multi-vocal technique offers a fresh dimension to tourism studies research on the complex nature of the travel experience.

I suggest that the relationship of the individual and the ‘other’ lies at the heart of all travel and that the nexus of traveller, space and difference – self, context and other – is a key to understanding the travel choice to experience the unknown as destination.