

Engagement with legal discourse in an Australian university by international postgraduate Law students from non-common law and non-English speaking backgrounds

Stephen W. Price

Ph.D

2012

CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORSHIP/ORIGINALITY

I certify that the work in this thesis has not previously been submitted for a degree nor has it been submitted as part of requirements for a degree except as fully acknowledged within the text.

I also certify that the thesis has been written by me. Any help that I have received in my research work and the preparation of the thesis itself has been acknowledged. In addition, I certify that all information sources and literature used are indicated in the thesis.

Signature of Student

Acknowledgements

My greatest debt is to the students and lecturers who willingly participated in this project. I thank you all for the time you gave to me.

I would like to thank my supervisor, Professor Lesley Farrell, for her continuing guidance and encouragement, maintaining for me at times a commitment to and faith in this project when my own wilted. Thank you.

I am very grateful to Dr Tim Moore. At a crucial moment when the work seemed insurmountable he pressed me to keep writing and offered encouragement and feedback on the text produced. Again, thank you.

To a very good friend, Jenny Chinn, who carefully edited five of the chapters, paying great attention to detail. Thank you very much, your help was invaluable.

Thank you to Jenny Hyland for your much stretched patience and constant encouragement.

Thanks also to Ben who enquired always about the progress of this work but resisted asking why it was taking so long.

Lastly, I thank Molly, who often lay beside me as I worked, patiently waiting to take me for a walk and remind me of a life beyond the screen.

Contents

Chapter 1: Introduction	1
1.1. Introduction	1
1.2 Origins of the study (or my 'personal story')	3
1.3 Situating the research	6
1.4 Research questions	11
1.5 Outline of this study	12
Chapter 2: Methodology	15
2.1. Introduction	15
2.2. Student and lecturer recruitment	15
2.2.1. Student recruitment	15
2.2.2. Recruitment of lecturers	17
2.3. Student tasks	17
2.4. Student histories	18
2.4.1. Legal background	18
2.4.2. English language experience of students	19
2.5. Collection of data	20
2.6. A note on interview transcription and referencing of interviews	21
2.7. Methodological issues	22
2.7.1 Interviews	23
2.7.2 Text analysis	24
2.7.3. Concluding remark on methodological approach	30

Chapter 3: Text structure and the writing subject: addressing the reader	32
3.1. Introduction	32
3.2. Text structure and genre	35
3.3. Genre as abstract or concrete	39
3.3.1. The ineffability of genre	42
3.4. Student construction of addressee, context and text	45
3.4.1. Student sense of addressee	46
3.4.1.1. The institutional reader	47
3.4.1.2. The supposed reader	47
3.5. Context and addressee suggested by a student's texts	52
3.5.1. Narin's introduction to his Law of the Internet assignment	53
3.5.2. Comparing the introductions of two of Narin's assignments	55
3.6. Conclusion	57
Chapter 4: Authoring text: Use of sources and the writing subject	59
4.1. Introduction	59
4.2. Responsiveness to legal and institutional discourses	61
4.3. Reading the Law	62
4.4. Students' responsiveness.....	69
4.4.1. Responding to the institution	70
4.4.1.1. Explicit demands	70
4.4.1.1.1. Task and discipline, time limit and word count ..	71
4.4.1.1.2. Responding to perceived implicit demands	72
4.4.2. Responding to the discipline	76

4.4.2.1. Lawyerly engagement	79
4.4.2.2. Context v practices	84
4.5. Making meaning	88
4.6. Conclusion	93
 Chapter 5: Dialogism in assessment of a student task	 95
5.1. Introduction	82
5.2. The concept of dialogism and dialogised heteroglossia	96
5.3. Dialogism in a lecturer's reading of a student text	102
5.3.1. The different readings by the lecturer	103
5.3.2. The Lecturer's relationship with the student	106
5.3.3. Disciplinary reading of Narin's text	108
5.3.4 Shifts in the nature of engagement	112
5.4. Conclusion	116
 Chapter 6: Patchwriting and the writing subject	 120
6.1. Introduction	120
6.2. Thuy's orientation to her writing	124
6.2.1. Thuy's interests	124
6.2.1.1. The common law	126
6.2.1.2. Thuy's interest in 'English' and 'western culture'	129
6.3. Thuy's borrowing of sources	131
6.3.1 Authoritative expressions	131
6.3.2. Text borrowing	136
6.3.2.1. Lecturer comments on 'borrowing'	136

7.4.2.1. Text as icon	190
7.5. Laclau and the operation of the signifier	192
7.6. Conclusion	199
8. Conclusion	201
8.1. Summary	201
8.2. Answering the research questions	209
8.3. Implications of this study	210
Appendix A	214
Bibliography	241

Abstract

This thesis investigates the production of texts for assessment by international postgraduate law students in a Law Faculty at an Australian university. It focuses on the texts four students produced for a first semester and a second semester unit of study during their two-semester LLM. Taking its cue from the literature on identity and academic writing, this study focuses in particular on the formation of the writing subject. However, its central concern is not with the contribution made by different identities writers bring to their writing, nor with the exclusionary practices of disciplinary discourses, but with the formation of the writing subject as students engage with resources they must work with and draw from. Therefore, a distinction is made between identity (the sense one has of self) and the subject (the occupation of a place from which writing is possible). Accounts of the positioning of subjects by discourses require that a discourse has stable meanings the subject recognises and in this way takes up relatively stable identity positions within it. However, a central assumption in this thesis is that international students do not read the texts representing a discourse in such predictable ways. The theoretical basis of this study is the work of Bakhtin and his concept of dialogism. However, rather than viewing dialogism as a means by which acquisition of and mastery over discourse is achieved, the emphasis in this study is on the centrifugal forces Bakhtin identifies as central to the use of language and in particular his concepts of 'addressivity' and 'responsiveness'. This places the emphasis on the relatedness that underlies utterances and communicative activity, rather than the 'sameness' of convention and meaning achieved between users that acquisition implies. The achievement of identity disguises the incompleteness of the 'subject-in-process' (Kristeva), and the argument in this thesis is that this subject-in-process is clearly at stake in the writing of international students. This study looks at the extent to and ways in which students either do attempt to preserve already given identities and 'orchestrate' the materials they work with as best they can, or subject themselves to the discourses/texts they engage with. A central argument is that the process of subjection to a discourse renders the student's sense of self vulnerable and needs to be understood in part at least in terms of the relationship the student has to the materiality of language (the signifier) and not wholly in terms of establishing appropriate meanings (signifieds). Data for this study was collected/generated in the form of: collection of essays for the two units of study each student selected to submit to this research; interviews with students about their essay and the writing of it; journals students kept during the process of researching and writing their assignment; interviews with the lecturers who assessed the student essays.