

MARK TITMARSH

Chromo-man

2013 | Verge Gallery, Intra-sections

(Silly) String Theory 2

2013 | Marrickville Garage, Some Rooms

Chromo-man

These exhibitions are located in the field of image making and expanded painting with a specific focus on the spatialisation of traditional craft based skills in the visual art disciplines of painting and drawing. The works question the nature of static imagery in an age of convergent media and multimodal practices.

The aesthetic premise of these works is that the artist or designer can use any coloured thing to create work and is not restricted to traditional mark making tools like the pen, pencil, brush or even the virtual presentation of those devices on image making software like photoshop or illustrator. Furthermore in these two works performance is used as a time-based event in which the artist can become the surface on which colour is applied rather than the director of marks beyond his own body. As Stephen Melville (2001) argues “painting has no essence outside of history, gathering and dispersing itself at every moment”, in this case dispersing away from brush and easel to gather around string and the body.

These works offer alternate models of practice that move beyond the traditional presumptions suggested by the apparatus of historical mark making devices. They engage an impetus subtly suggested by the digital era in which individuals are compelled to use more than one skill and any available device must also move across several technical boundaries. Intrasections was reviewed by Andrew Frost, Sydney Morning Herald (Saturday 31 August 2013) and by Leanne Richards, City News (5 September 2013).

MARK TITMARSH
Chromo-man
(Silly) String Theory 2

Chromo-man

MARK TITMARSH
Chromo-man
(Silly) String Theory 2

(Silly) String Theory 2

MARK TITMARSH
Chromo-man
(Silly) String Theory 2

Installation views

1.

2.

INTRA-SECTIONS

The installation Intra-sections asks the artists involved to put the entire gallery space up for negotiation in order to create a site of interactivity as the artists' installations spill over and encroach upon each other. Works start to blend creating a reading of the works, which is a conglomeration of everything, all at once – all together. This directly references life's visual language – the contemporary everyday visual experience. As in the everyday we read and decipher intricate visual systems all the time as things overlap, converge and disjuncture commonly appears: a billboard, a building and a tree. It is a conglomeration of detritus, of ever-pervasive advertising campaigns, dead leaves, bricks and broken bicycles. Where relics co-exist with the latest technology. In this field everything has equal visual presence hierarchies dissolve into a general blur of background noise.

City life and ordinary everyday experiences therefore is a confluence of layered objects, structures and environments from various eras that informs our common understanding of western culture. Everyday life also involves the mundane activities where the emphasis is on personal maintenance and routine and is concerned with the present moment, relationships, activities, emotions and frivolous playful behaviour. Lived experience then informs our understanding and creates a visual referencing system in which we can view art. Intra-sections abstracts this experience, asking the viewer to be a participant, to drift through the space experiencing the ebbs and flows of the installation rather like psychogeography. Intra-Sections is to be experienced in the same way, to be viewed as a total environment, through an open understanding to the currents, vortexes and experiences of the city.

Like the everyday, Intra-sections focus is on ordinary events, settings and activities within personal and collective experience, which happens constantly, continuously and simultaneously. This relates to Nicolas Bourriaud's Relational Aesthetics where theory and practical understanding is taken from the whole of human relations and their social context. The exhibition therefore is interested in everyday visual experience and how it now backgrounds our contemporary understanding of place and things. In installing works in this collective way rather than in an artist's grouping of works the proximity of contrasting elements creates complex relationships between disparate objects and alters the meanings of things just as in life.

Intra-sections responds to a lecture by British independent curator and artist Paul O'Neill at Artspace Visual Arts Centre in Sydney. O'Neill discussed his approach to exhibition space as background, middle-ground and foreground and to group exhibitions as sites for experimentation and collaboration between artists. Intra-sections puts into practice O'Neill's ideas through the way space is negotiated as a field in which artists work and openly intersect. The artists' engagement extends to one another's work, as each artist must imagine the possibility of their work interceding and connecting with the space and the artists around them. The artists' response to contemporary life is first and foremost through a conscious engagement by all the artists with the formal properties of their chosen materials, literal references to a material in its intended everyday use is altered.

In Mark Titmarsh's use of silly string, an engagement with the formal and social properties of 'low art' material is shown. He takes the material out of its usual situation and places it within the sphere of art. He then performs with the silly string in a social context.

Sally Clarke works with chequered linoleum not only for its formal qualities but also for the domesticity inherent to the material. In stacking and gridding the excised linoleum, Clarke alludes to the grid of modernity as well as the cityscape and to one's grandmother's kitchen floor.

The Chinese-made gold foil Kim Connerton uses to coat interior or exterior surfaces is a direct interaction with architecture. Gold in art history symbolized transcendence, wealth and elevation. She engages in that conversation yet arrives at her chosen material through its accessibility, and reference to re-looking at the whole city not just as 'paved in gold' but as a creative space re-configured.

Bijana Jancic's 'Spill' relates to the notion of a light spillage created through a continuation of thinking about mirrored surfaces, self-negation and in absorbing directly from other things and architecture. Jancic references the ephemera capturing a particular configuration of light and drawing attention to shifting light patterns created by the environment. Sarah Newall's use of the common materials of paint and plywood for the do-it-yourself-er refers to the formal properties of the materials and their relationship to painting. Her use of these low art materials comments on décor and the individual's relationship to domestic space.

Nuha Saad uses pre-made architectural wooden trim and ornamental wallpaper to make sculptural objects that take the material beyond its original function and intention. In taking on the appearance of minimalist sculptures Saad alters the context of her materials to create sculptural 'paintings' that evoke the way domestic interiors act as vessels of personal memory, and how details of colour and décor can catch one's attention to reveal hidden narratives.

The Twilight Girls blue mucosal slime creeps out across the gallery floor, infecting, coating and ingesting other works. The slime strangely holds form, amorphous yet structured, perhaps a reference to the B-grade masterpiece 'The Blob', or even neural pathways.

In Intra-Sections the blurring of the boundaries between the artworks forces an interaction and overlapping. Borders – boundaries – frames disappear as seepage causes cross-pollination, or even infection, to the extent that individual work may morph into another. The exhibition becomes an intense situation of potential collaboration and experimentation materialising into a work in its own right.

Sarah Newall August 2013

Images: (left) Intra-Sections, installation view, foreground: The Twilight Girls: Jane Polkinghorne and Helen Hyatt-Johnston, Aqua Muzoa, Detail, 2013, jelly wax, plastic, background: Kim Connerton, Pre-life standing in the sun together, 2013, gold mylar.

(front) Intra-sections, 2013, installation view, detail: Sally Clarke, Nuha Saad, Sarah Newall, Bijana Jancic.

(inside panel) Mark Titmarsh, Chromo-man, performance, 2013.

(back) Intra-sections, 2013, installation view, detail: Sally Clarke, Nuha Saad.

MARK TITMARSH Chromo-man (Silly) String Theory 2

Intra-sections catalogue

Sally Clarke
Kim Connerton
Sarah Newall
Nuha Saad
Mark Titmarsh
Bijana Jancic
The Twilight Girls

Verge Gallery
City Road
Jane Foss Russell Plaza
University of Sydney
23 August to 7 September 2013
Gallery Hours:
Monday to Saturday 10am - 5pm
(02) 9563 6218
Director: Greg Shapley
g.shapley@usu.usyd.edu.au

Curator:
Sarah Newall
Photography:
Jane Polkinghorne
Arthur Georgeson
Publication Design:
Emma Sprouster
Published By:
Sally Clarke, Kim Connerton, Sarah Newall, Nuha Saad, Mark Titmarsh, Bijana Jancic, The Twilight Girls

VERGE GALLERY

Edition of 200
ISBN: 978-0-9923331-0-2

INTRA-SECTIONS

Power Play' by Sally Clarke, 2012, photo by Luminere Imaging

INTRA-SECTIONS

A plethora of colours, shapes, media and form feature in the Verge Gallery's Intra-sections exhibition. The show focuses on boundaries and borders and the pieces merge and separate randomly creating an explosion of light and sensations. The art works range from a gelatinous blue jellyfish impersonation with tendrils that trail on the floor, to green splodges of paint spilling on the walls. A silly string sculpture adds to the visual eccentricity. The installations intertwine and twist around the space, over lapping, contrasting and complementing each other in superbly pleasant chaos, which evokes the playfulness and joy of childhood. From the shining gold mass of Kim Connerton's Pre-Life standing in the sun together, to the pastels of Aqua Mucosa, Intra-sections is a challenging and curiously enticing experience which encourages introspection and reverie. It continues the tradition of unique artistic expression which is typical of the Verge Gallery. (LR)
 Until Sep 7, Verge Gallery, City Rd, Jane Foss Russell Plaza, University of Sydney, Free, verge-gallery.net

LEANNE RICHARDS

SYDNEY CITY NEWS

VISUAL ART

Open gallery

DISORIENT
 Suggestive of the labyrinthine entanglements that draw the artist in and out of darkness, Yanni Pounartzis' suite of oil paintings on polyester (pictured) are geometrically, as well as psychologically, intense – all the more so for knowing that each ribbon of colour is painted freehand. Thursday-Sunday, 1-6pm, until September 8, MOP Projects, 2/39 Abercrombie Street, Chippendale, 9699 3955.

MAKING CHANGE
 Returning home from its premiere at Beijing's National Art Museum of China late last year, Making Change combines archival photographs of Gough Whitlam's ground-breaking visits to China in the early 1970s with the contemporary work of 24 indigenous artists, in a split-personality show that perfectly launches COFA's new split-level exhibition spaces. Tuesday-Saturday, 10am-5pm, until October 5, Galleries UNSW, COFA, corner Oxford Street and Greens Road, Paddington, 8936 0888.

INTRA-SECTIONS
 In this group show of seven artists, it is often difficult to discern where one work stops and another begins. Splatters of Crazy String merge with jellyfish-like globules on the floor and silver streaks continue beyond the gallery doors, in an eye-popping exploration of the expanded field of painting. Monday-Saturday, 10am-5pm, until September 7, Verge Gallery, University of Sydney, Jane Foss Russell Plaza, City Road, Darlington, 9563 6218.

MARK TITMARSH Chromo-man (Silly) String Theory 2

1. City News review
2. Spectrum review

Weblinks:
<http://verge-gallery.net/2013/08/13/intra-sections/>
<http://marrickvillegarage.com/2013/10/29/november-projects/>